Rector of Institution Makes Forceful Address in Which He Outlines Aims of University and Its Hopes for Future-Describes Wonderful Progress in Last Twenty Years.

Following the conferring of degrees, Dr. Shahan made the address to the graduates, in which, after paying tribute to the successful administration of his predecessor in office, Bishop O'Connell, he called attention to the fact that with the present year the university was closing the second decade of its existence.

In the last twenty years, he said, very much had been accomplished. The university had found Northeast Washington, an undeveloped section. Gradually this section had developed in contact with the life and work of the university until now Brookland and Bloomingdale are rightly "Washington now really touches the very gates of the university," he added, "and it is not improbable that in the thedral. Twenty years ago only Divinity Hall lifted its head above the summer versity and its immediate vicinity.

"More important, however, is the actual development of the university-its intrinsic growth, the realization of the purpose for which it was established. Its professors have grown from four to thirty-two, and its students have increased in prond the university now counts about 225 registered students, of whom eightyfive are lay students, partly graduate, partly undergraduate. It may be well to note that the great Catholic University of Louvain in Belgium, the finest of its kind in the world, began some seventy or eighty years ago with only thirteen professors and eighty-six students, and for the first ten years of its existence grew slowly, indeed, despite the fact that it was located in the heart of an almost entirely Catholic population. 'The academic work of the university during these decades apart from the daily round of instruction has been a work of and conscientious systematization. To-day that work stands fairly well and eventually to be in the catholic life of our fatherland like a city built upon ountain.
